This script is used to remove all of the free space from your system. This is useful for scheduling a maintenance window and other applications. You can even schedule it to erase all free space at a certain date and time. This script can be executed on shutdown as well as restart. The advantage of scripting this is that you can stop it when you need to. You also don't have to execute it every time! While you can use this to remove the free space, that would mean erasing all of your data. There is a solution to that by using Deep Freeze. Deep Freeze creates a virtual disk image of the entire contents of a hard drive. With this in place, if you power down your computer you lose only the data that is already on the hard drive at the time of shutdown. This is the most secure way to do a hard drive wipe. However, if you are hosting sensitive data it is recommended you use both Deep Freeze and this script to make sure you cover your bases.
