Belgium’s police chief is at the forefront of an effort to combat extremism and xenophobia. It’s a struggle that extends to every level of society, the chief said, and he warned that Belgium could be on the brink of a crisis similar to France’s “yellow vest” protests. “We do not tolerate extremism,” Brussels police chief Philippe Muyters told The Associated Press on Friday after a report on the nationwide situation published by Belgian broadcaster VRT. “It is not something that only takes place in the extremes. We see daily how the so-called ‘proper’ people, middle-class people are affected,” he added.

ADVERTISEMENT The 55-page report says the country’s “Islamophobia network” has been getting stronger, the so-called “yellow vest” protest movement is on the rise, and there is a danger of rising extremism. Counter-terrorism has surged in recent months to the point where it is “relevance,” said Muyters. “We saw a reduction in the terrorist threat level last year and an increase this year, and we think that will increase further if we do not sufficiently deter violent extremism,” Muyters said. The report comes about a week after a 17-year-old gunman shot dead four people at a Jewish museum in Brussels and in the wake of a nationwide jihadist terror attack in which a 37-year-old man rammed a stolen car into a crowd of 3da54e8ca3
