Com Dat's MSX computer came with one of the first MSX style monochrome LCD displays; [1] although it was actually a 128x32 pixel CRT. Power was provided by a single 3V cell [2] from a 9V battery. Com Dat MSX computers came from two lines; the Com Zone series, which were mainly used for MSX games, and the North Star series, which were used for business and entertainment. [1] Data Paradise only released a 2740 games [3] and came without the logo. The functionality of the North Star is very similar to that of other systems from that era, with very limited user input. The very limited functionality of the MSX2 computer was probably due to the ability of the NEC V20 to run MSX2 games. [1]? According to the game manual, it also came in an XD format [2] which are encased in a plastic shell with serial numbers on them [3] which is very hard to find in Taito game manuals.
