This guide will take you through how to create a free Photoshop alternative and supplement the ones found in Photoshop, Photoshop Elements, Adobe Lightroom, and other applications. Whether you're a beginner looking for a lightweight alternative to Photoshop or more advanced user looking for something just a bit more high-end than Photoshop Elements, here is a list of apps that you can use to create a free website mockup in less than an hour. 1. Pixlr Pixlr is a free photo editing and web design app that's available on iOS and Android. It has a vibrant community and a huge library of more than 50,000 free filters and tools. It's also the most trusted tool for editing memes. Editing Pixlr is perfect for editing on the go as it allows for great image editing and design while you're on your phone. It has so many tools and filters that you can pretty much do almost anything on it. It has tilt-shift, liquify, frames, despeckle, blur, vignette, and a host of other filters and effects. Designing It has a vast selection of fonts and you can use your own custom typefaces and textframes. The various buttons, text and shapes can be moved and resized and they come in a range of sizes. Color palette You'll find a wide range of color palettes to help you choose colors. The app has 40 color palettes. Miscellaneous When you use the smudge tool you can paint on top of other images and place your own watermark or text. The app also has a ton of tools for background-painting, creating and manipulating images, vector shapes, adding text, transforming images, using stickers and drawing beautiful frames. Adding text and shapes The app has a ton of great stock clip art and images that you can use to create beautiful memes or posters. You can use the shapes and text to create such things as the perfect shirt, a frame, an arrow or text from your own photos. Memes The Memes panel includes more than 200 stock clips, including silhouettes, frames, icons, illustrations and typography. You can apply a single or multiple fonts, paint on an image with a variety of colors and effects, and add blur, frames, glows, and shadows to create the perfect meme.

'Facebook Libra' Will Fail If People Don't Trust It - aaronbrethorst ===== DrAwdeOccarim Facebook has a history of deliberately lying to its customers. When using the service, you have a choice to use private or public data. It's common knowledge that Facebook made people switch to private data on purpose, and then lied to people about how that private data was being used. I don't expect to see more of that with Libra, but if people aren't willing to accept that data could be used without the permission of the owner, Facebook will continue to be bad for users. ----- lumberjack This is Facebook. We all know what they will do. The only thing we can do is to make sure we are smart enough not to be part of that. ~~~ WalterSear Making sure, in business, to give to their users what they want, for their own good. Q: Sending a request with Python Requests I'm currently having problems with sending a request with Python Requests. I have a web server hosted on a Django server and I use Requests to check for updates on that server. This is the code that I use to check for updates. `r = requests.get("headers=headers, verify=False)` I use the `r.content` to check if updates are available. I've read a bit about requests, but I don't understand how to send a request to a django server that requires a login. If there's a solution that doesn't require a login, I'd like to use it. If there is no solution that doesn't require a login, I'd like to know how I could send a request for a login. Edit: Just to clarify, I have no access to the django server. The only way to get there is by request, and the only way I can access it (other than by request) is through the Django's admin page. I want to send a request that changes a setting on my-servers-ip, so that I can check for updates without having

Robert Plant to return to BBC Radio 2 It's been widely believed for a while that Sir Robert Plant is set to return to his role as a regular on the programming side of BBC Radio 2, an impression bolstered by the singer's appearance at this year's Radio 2 Festival, where he performed several of his classic songs and even duetted with Michael Bublé, who was a surprise guest. For years now, rumor has been putting fans on tenterhooks. When Chris Evans was hosting the Radio 2 Breakfast show, Evans would often refer to Led Zeppelin's old singer as "the other Robert Plant", which was taken by some to indicate that Plant would be returning to the station. Plant himself has appeared unshakable in his commitment to his involvement with Radio 2, saying, "It's a legacy, really, you know – it's such a beautiful thing, it's been going on for 60 years. It's a wonderful legacy." There are no official announcements yet, and no official confirmation of the rumors. One of the show's presenters, Steve Wright, responded in comments to a tweet about the show's future by saying, "to many it has never stopped..." The BBC has reportedly been lukewarm to the idea of Plant's return, preferring to bring in contemporary musicians. That all seems to be changing now, however, and Plant's appearance at last month's festival was widely regarded as a watershed moment. Only 4 percent of insurance companies pay out fully on personal injury claims. The lion's share of the payouts goes to attorneys, forcing families to go to court to get their money. CNN legal analyst Sunny Hostin said Wednesday that the epidemic of people agreeing to settle cases without going through the actual trial is causing damage not only to individuals but to communities as well. "We, as a society, have also been doing less than we should be doing for decades," Hostin said. "The reason why we're seeing this is because the insurance companies have been very successful at getting people to agree to settle cases," she said. According to her, companies are not providing enough money to pay for the costs of litigation, and that results in more cases being settled out of court
