Hello, my name is Andrzej Łużycki and I work as a freelance systems developer from Wrocław, Poland. My job involves extensive usage of the Windows shell, but in addition to Microsoft-specific knowledge I'm also familiar with various Linux distributions and Unix-based operating systems. The main purpose of my software is to enable you to track folder sizes (including the files that are contained in these folders) and to find your files that exceed a certain size. Using these features you can find out which folder takes up the most disk space, find out where the files that slow down your computer are located, and so on. I have incorporated various common sorting options into this software to help you find files of a certain type (duplicates, largest, etc.) and I have included a couple of tools that can help you remove the password from a certain registry value. I hope this software will help you find space that is wasting your time on your hard drives, and I wish you a great experience. ### What's New in the?

Space Explorer Home Edition is a lightweight disk space analyser that is easy to install and simple to use. Using Space Explorer's innovative algorithms, it is able to identify all excess and redundant information in order to separate it into different categories, such as the user's preferred data, temporary data, and junk. Space Explorer Home Edition can also sort all the data it finds and create reports about it. If you are looking to keep your computer running as smooth as possible, you'll find it useful to use Space Explorer to monitor your hard disk on a regular basis. In fact, with Space Explorer, you can even create the customised reports about your disk space usage that you always wanted. Key Benefits:

- Identifies all files and folders on local drives, network drives, and in pre-selected areas of your hard disk.
- Recognises and handles common types of file extensions.
- For FAT volumes only, it recognizes folders with a common root name (such as "Movies" or "Music").
- Has a quick and intuitive installation; it requires only the space needed by the software, and it's free from advertising or other intrusive windows that some other commercial disk analysers may have.
- Supports the Microsoft FAT and NTFS file systems.
- Relatively small footprint.
- It can keep track of the folders and files in more than one area of your hard disk.
- Identifies files that can't be opened.
- For FAT volumes only, it can also check a file's last access date.
- Quick to scan through and intuitive to use, Space Explorer Home Edition can identify and export files in just a few seconds.
- Detects large files and displays them alongside their compressed sizes.
- Identifies unused DLLs; it can even generate a list of DLLs with the highest unneeded usage.
- Uses fewer system resources than other commercial versions; it does not require service packs and does not slow down your computer.
- Quick to use and easy to install; the version in development is about 80% complete, but you can choose to test the latest version that is ready to use out of the box.
- Analyse local and network drives; you can even choose to scan pre-selected drives (such as C, D, or E, the root directory of Windows NT
