Chicago award for healthcare program

David M. Nickerson, president and CEO of Alliance HealthCare in Chicago, delivered the keynote address at the 2013 S. Mary Walker Young Women and Philanthropy Forum on May 10. Alliance HealthCare in Chicago was one of 12 charitable organizations recognized as being the best in America for their youth programs for 2013. Alliance HealthCare is a not-for-profit agency that provides free healthcare for the most vulnerable residents in the greater Chicago area. "We're proud to join the company of such amazing charitable organizations in Chicago," Nickerson said in a statement. "We see the unique value in providing healthcare to seniors, children and youth who are unable to access it." Non-profit organizations from across the nation were recognized during the more than 20-year-old S. Mary Walker Young Women and Philanthropy Forum. This year was the first time that the Forum presented awards to healthcare-focused organizations. The award program recognizes healthcare-related organizations that have positive impacts on their community, such as their youth or workforce, according to the organization's website. For the third consecutive year, the Alliance was also named the No. 1 nonprofit in Chicago based on a social impact ranking that was derived from an analysis of more than 4,000 charities that were rated by U.S. Census data.

Q: How to get the argument given to PHP function as a variable name? The title explains everything. Let's see a simple example: Now I want the $string be used as a variable name to get "this" from the function. I know I can do that by using `eval('$var = '. $string. ';')`, but is there a cleaner way to do it without eval?

A: you should first explain more clearly what you are trying to do, but here's one way you could do that: `$string = "this"; //`

not a good approach `$vars =` `get_defined_vars(); eval("$. $string. " =` `\". $vars[$string]. ";"); // and a`
