This will probably violate some HN guidelines, but I think that this information is really interesting. I'm planning to try it out when I can get around my schedule (I'm a PhD student, so it's a bit hard to make this work) but it would be great to do a similar experiment with women. E.g. if men liked to get high on testosterone immediately after they'd had sex, might this be something they'd really enjoy?

I'm not sure that I'm convinced of the ethics of this at all, but I'm interested to see if it actually works. The objective of the project is the solution of the problem of gravity induced stress in engineering structures. The effects of this stress are measured by vibration, cracking, fracture and fatigue. The physical approach consists of three components: the equations of variational theory; an approximate numerical method and machine codes for the computation of the eigenfrequencies of different configurations. The theoretical component consists of the development and analysis of the governing equations. The numerical component of the project provides two different methods for the solution of the differential equations as well as machine codes for the solution of the algebraic equations arising in the formulation of the variational principles. An example is also given of the high precision solution of vibration problems. The third component of the project is the design of the experimental part. In order to complement the theoretical predictions and the finite element computations, the experts have devised a systematic design method for the testing of the critical parts of the same example.Sisters of St. Peter
