In some situations, it may be necessary for an aircraft to fly a second flight path during flight. For example, a refueling aircraft may be required to perform a return flight after refueling an aircraft. The aircraft flying the second flight path may be referred to as a "secondary aircraft" or simply as "secondary". A primary aircraft such as a refueling aircraft may include a flight crew. Typically, at least one of the flight crew will be the pilot of the primary aircraft. The pilot of the primary aircraft may be referred to as the "pilot in command" (PIC). The PIC of a primary aircraft may have a number of responsibilities, including, but not limited to, performing maneuvering of the aircraft for landing and takeoff, and monitoring and coordinating the actions of the flight crew in the secondary aircraft. For example, when the primary aircraft is flying at landing, the PIC may have to direct the approach and landing of the primary aircraft.
