Build 15. Superhydrophobic Encapsulation of Quantum Dots with 3D Hierarchical Porous Carbon Nanofibers. Superhydrophobic encapsulation of quantum dots (QDs) is achieved using hierarchically porous carbon nanofibers (HPCFs), which provide a high surface area, high hydrophobicity, and good light-guiding properties. As a result, the superhydrophobic QD-HPCF composites are applied to the photovoltaic devices to optimize the light-to-charge conversion efficiency, and show an approximately 30% enhancement in light-to-electricity conversion efficiency compared to the nonmodified quantum dot devices under one sun illumination. The surface modification of carbon nanofibers has great potential for efficient and stable phot
