Recent Articles American enterprise solar market leaders SunPower and Abound Solar yesterday announced that they will halt all sales and development activities in the wake of three large-scale solar farms going bankrupt and amid plunging investment in the US' largest photovoltaic maker. Both companies said that plant will go dark within days, having reached a "lack of long term financing and a very capital intensive business model". Earlier this month, California's Solyndra filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, delaying the operation of a 141MW installation in Riverside County. Companies in the United States have been pouring billions of dollars of equity capital into Abound Solar, the entrepreneur incubator funded by Bill Gates. But as finance issues began to mount, the Riverside project and others in the Abound investment portfolio experienced internal turmoil and started experiencing a lack of long-term financing. In February the initial round of funding that brought in $120m in equity, was then topped up by $50m of additional equity from sources as diverse as Google Ventures and a group of Chinese investors. The situation deteriorated in April when SunPower bought a $200m stake in Abound and began pushing for management changes. In June the WSJ reported that Abound and its investors c6a93da74d
